

Operations policy Permascand

We create value

At Permascand, we value delivering competitive solutions for water treatment and electrochemical process engineering which in turn creates value for our customers and for society at large. We engage in an open dialogue with our customers and suppliers on what they expect of us and our products. This dialogue includes how a lifecycle perspective can be developed and improved upon to protect the environment by preventing pollution, and in turn create a sustainable business. Laws and other binding requirements are a minimum requirement. Deviations, complaints, and incidents will be investigated promptly to actively discourage repetition.

Responsibility through involvement and participation

We utilise the whole knowledgebase off Permascand to support development and change. This increases the commitment of all involved parties and lays down the conditions to drive the continuous improvement of products, working methods and management of operations. At Permascand, each employee has concrete tasks with clearly defined responsibilities and authority. Responsibility for a safe working environment, products of high quality and a clean environment starts with the individual. Therefore, each individual employee has the responsibility to actively contribute to development by making suggestions for improvements and to report incidents or other abnormalities. For management, this responsibility includes allocating the resources required to maintain and develop the QEHS management system and its function.

Right from us to you and safety starts with me – on all levels

At Permascand, we combine theoretical and practical knowledge with experience and imaginative thinking to meet any customer requirements. Customers should feel confident in being well received and informed, from ordering through to production or remanufacture to the delivery of the product. This we will achieve through a professional mindset. This method applies not only to the customer, but also within Permascand. We treat each other with respect and actively work to develop each other and to prevent injury and illness. Simply right in word and deed!
